YOUNG WOMAN CHOSEN AS "MISS BRISTOL" WILL FARE DURING TRIP TO YELLOWSTONE PARK WHAT MAKES GEYSER "GEYSE" TO SEE "OLD FAITHFUL"

Forty-Six of the 4,000 Hot Springs Possess Healing Properties—Departure From Park Will Be Over the World-Famous and Picturesque Cody Road, 90-Mile Drive

MUCH CARE EXERCISED IN TABULATION OF VOTE

In answer to a number of inquiries concerning the vote tabulation in the Courier and merchants "Miss Bristol" contest:

The tabulation appearing each day is from 24 to 48 hours behind the ballot casting. This is made necessary because of the desire to exercise the greatest care to prevent error. The ballots are collected from each of the 15 voting places. They are then sorted, listed and tabulated and each tabulation checked before they are published.

Yesterday the Courier was flooded with inquiries asking why the vote of the respective candidates was not larger than that recorded.

When Miss Bristol goes to Yellowstone Park this summer as the winner of the prize trip in the Better Times Contest being conducted by the Bristol Courier and co-operating merchants, she will probably want to know "what makes a geyser geyse."

For, according to Yellowstone Park guides and rangers, this is the inevitable question asked by park visitors. And, it should be added, there are few who come away without the information, if the efficient staff of Yellowstone Rangers can do anything about it.

Incidentally, those same geysers which give rise to the oft-repeated question, are one of the many reasons why Yellowstone is an international attraction and why it has been chosen by this newspaper as the destination of the winning trip.

Probably no other feature of the park is looked forward to with greater curiosity and interest by tourists than are the geysers and hot springs. There are 4,000 hot springs, of which 46 are said to possess healing properties.

Old Faithful is the most famous of the geysers but Giant is the largest. The reason Old Faithful is better known is because it erupts once an hour and everybody who visits the park is sure to see it, while Giant and many others erupt only occasionally and are witnessed by fewer people.

Old Faithful will be only one of the many wonders viewed by Miss Bristol. She will enter Yellowstone via Gardiner Gateway and the first major spectacle in that vicinity will be the Mammoth Hot Springs. From there she will proceed to Norris Geyser Basin, Old Faithful, Yellowstone Lake, and the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone. Her departure from the park will probably lead across the picturesque and fantastic Buffalo Bill country which is traversed by only one highway, the amazing Cody Road. Its terminal is Cody, Wyoming, destination of through sleepers on the North Coast Limited, the train which will carry the Better Times queen.

President's Ultimatum

Washington, D. C., June 25—A stunned Congress, already weary with strife, today faced the blunt ultimatum from President Roosevelt that it must immediately write a tax bill ripping the nation's great fortunes apart. Moreover, the President wants Congress to perform this hitherto unheard of feat by Saturday night. Existing emergency sales taxes yielding $500,000,000 yearly expires June 30th and the President would like to see his share-the-wealth program attached to the emergency tax extension resolution as a rider.

The task involved was admittedly almost impossible but Senate and House leaders tackled it automatically. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau is ready to submit schedules to carry out the President's mandate. From now on Congress must shoulder the blame or the credit of the failure or success for the new deal's new move to tax the rich.

KEYSTONE PUBLISHERS RESIST JERSEY RAID

(North Penn Reporter, Lansdale, June 24, 1935)

In attempting to prevent payment for the advertising of the list of the mercantile appraiser in Bucks county, the established newspapers have accepted the challenge hurled at them by a carpetbagging band of political adventurers, operating with the frank co-operation of Governor Earle and his associates in manifest disregard of the statute.

The business is the most amazing defiance of the law that has come to the surface in the somewhat abbreviated annals of Mr. Earle's administration.

The New Jersey men who have invaded Pennsylvania for the sole purpose of grabbing a fat political plum may have been ignorant of the law when they undertook the raid, incredible as that may seem.

Dr. Flood, chairman of the Democratic county committee in Bucks, could hardly have shared any such innocence when he recommended the manifestly illegal employment of the new-born Bucks County Times—News or what have you—as a vehicle for state advertising.

Granting the promoters and Chairman Flood were as innocent as they may be presumed to be by a generous stretch of the imagination, Secretary of Revenue Barnes can offer no effective defense.

As an avowed candidate for the Supreme Court, he is presumed to know the law. As a high public official he is sworn to uphold it.

That he deliberately elected to proceed with a forbidden expenditure of public funds after the breach of the statute had been pointed out constitutes gloomy prophecy as to the sort of justice which may be expected from him, if elected to the highest court in Pennsylvania.

It is rigorous medicine for the publishers of legitimate newspapers to administer—that warning of a surcharge against County Treasurer Landis, if he pays a bill which Mr. Barnes has incurred—but they could hardly do less in justice to the law and in fairness to their own interests.

TRAVELER TELLS OF BATTLE WITH A SHARK

Swimmer Companion of M. Cianciosi Hoisted From Water in Nick of Time

MAN-EATER CAPTURED

A thrilling story of an escape from a shark while bathing from their schooner, "The Pilgrim" and the subsequent killing of the sea monster, is told by Michael Cianciosi, Grand avenue, in a letter written from Hamilton, Bermuda.

The letter of the young Bristolian who is accompanying the Adam's Expedition in search of buried and sunken treasure, follows:

Adam's Expedition, Schooner "Pilgrim", Hamilton, Bermuda, June 19, 1935.

The Editor, Bristol Courier, Bristol, Pa.

Dear Sir:

We have reached Bermuda today and will be home in approximately ten days. We bring with us tales of the old Spanish main, old superstitions of zombies, dummies and obies; legends of the dim past, of Henry Morgan, Corfue, LaTour, LaFitte, Norman and LaTrobe.

Though no actual treasure has been recovered we consider the expedition a tremendous success since we have successfully investigated numerous treasure spots. We were not equipped to recover treasure, merely to investigate. Now the road has been paved and we intend to return with a modern and perfectly equipped ship to recover what the old pirates so laboriously buried. This is as much of the treasure story we will let out, the rest is shrouded in justified mystery.

Our story reads like the pages from the annals of fiction. One rare incident (coming for the first time and could never produce quite the same sensation at any time thereafter) was the thrilling shark episode off the coast of Haiti on our sail to Bermuda. (This episode is indeed thrilling and is the main object of this letter).

It was on a hot, sultry day that we were becalmed in the Windward Passage off the west coast of Haiti. Our Diesel engines would not respond, hence we were left idle on the windless sea. The water was without a ripple and the sun beat down mercilessly on us. I thought if nothing could be done about the sailing of the ship at least I could do something about the heat. I rigged a knotted rope over the starboard railing and without warning dove overboard. The crew immediately voiced their disapproval explaining the extreme danger in my act. I assured them that it was perfectly safe to execute a quick dive and a hurried climb to the ship. A few more dives into the cool water convinced a few of them. But how did I know that the plunge of my body through the clear waters had already attracted a denizen of the sea?

Burke and Cassidy (members of the expedition) followed my example and dove in. Suddenly from the deck came the terse command of our friend Schroeder, "Come out, boys, make it snappy," as he looked over their shoulders at some object of danger behind them. I too had seen and only prayed silently. At first it seemed as if Schroeder were playing a joke, but

THREATEN SURCHARGE IF PAYMENT IS MADE

Publishers Charge State Advertising in New-Born Paper Is Law Defiance

WARN COUNTY TREAS.

LANSDALE, June 25—The Weekly Newspapers' Association of Montgomery County, which includes in its membership all of the newspapers in Bucks except three, yesterday moved to prevent the payment of any bill the Bucks County Times, the Bucks County News, or the Bucks County Times and News may present for the publication of the list of licenses compiled by Mercantile Appraiser Howard F. Davis on the ground that such payment would be an illegal diversion of public funds.

The publishers' association, acting through Walter L. Sanborn, secretary, notified County Treasurer Leidy M. Landis, of Bucks County, that the matter in question could not legally be placed in the papers named because it is impossible for them to meet the requirement of regular publication for six months previous to the insertion of the advertising.

The Bucks County News suspended publication last November. The Bucks County Times is a new publication, whose ostensible owners are operators of the Lambertville, N. J., Beacon. They are alleged to have "carpetbagged" their way across the Delaware for the purpose of grabbing the publication of the mercantile list.

In this strange venture they have the full support of Chairman Flood of the Bucks Democratic committee, and the administration at Harrisburg.

This is indicated by the fact that Secretary of Revenue H. Edgar Barnes was advised by the legitimate publishers previous to the appearance of the advertising in question in the first issue of the Bucks County Times, which also purports to be No. 1 of Volume II of the Bucks County News, on Friday, that such publication of the mercantile list advertising was clearly illegal.

Mr. Barnes' department appeared to recognize this fact, but the latest word from Harrisburg was that "Governor Earle insisted" that the business

Still On Hunger Strike

Harrisburg, June 25—But a shadow of his former self, Querino Carlucci, Hershey, accused of slaying two persons during a mad rampage, today began the third week of a hunger strike in Dauphin county prison. Carlucci has lost sixty pounds in weight since his incarceration. When asked why he refused to eat he mumbled in broken English, "sorry, want die, want die," prison attaches reported. Carlucci is charged with slaying Amelio Giovannetti and his wife Laura on the morning of April 2nd in the Italian section of Hershey, and wounding Octavio Tace and Martini Massillio.

Dies In Unusual Accident

York, June 25—Adam Lau, 65, Hart Rock, lay dead of injuries suffered when thrown head first into a concrete culvert from his buggy. Authorities said a backing strap broke and upset the buggy against a signpost, hurling the aged man to the road.

Marriage Licenses Jump

Harrisburg, June 25—Dan Cupid shot back into full stride last year in Pennsylvania, the Department of Health reported today. Vital statistics show that 78,000 marriage licenses were issued throughout the Commonwealth, more than during any other year since the records have been kept with the single exception of 1920.

Call Out Extra Officers

Paterson, N. J., June 25—Bristling with machine guns, rifles and shotguns, a police cordon was thrown about police headquarters today and extra officers posted on the roofs of nearby buildings following receipt of a telephone tip that an underworld attempt was to be made to liberate eight mobsters seized in a raid on a Mountain View bungalow early Sunday. Police Chief John Murphy declined to reveal the identity of the tipster who reported the plot. He ordered extraordinary precautions to guard against any risk by pals of the imprisoned men. Two of the eight men were positively identified as members of the gang that held up an armored car in Brooklyn and escaped with $427,000 last August, police announced last night.

TWO HUNDRED ARE REGISTERED FOR SUMMER SCHOOL

Fourteen Student-Teachers Arrive From Temple University Today

CONTINUE SIX WEEKS

Work is Diagnostic and Remedial; Subjects for Grades 7 to 12

Fourteen teachers arrived in Bristol today to prepare for the Summer School sessions, which will be conducted in the Bristol high school building during the next six weeks. The corps of instructors will be under direction of principal Warren P. Snyder of Bristol, and Professor Borden, of Temple University, Philadelphia, from which institution of learning the teachers come.

Registration occurred yesterday, with 200 boys and girls from grades seven to 12 being listed. The majority of these will take subjects in which they failed, and some will take subjects in which they wish their knowledge to be strengthened. No advanced credits will be offered at the Summer School sessions.

The roster will be arranged today, and at 8.30 tomorrow morning the students will report and be informed of the time of their classes. They will report every day thereafter for a period of six weeks. The classes will be completed by about August 6th.

All subjects taught in grades seven to 12 are offered, and on each subject taken the student is required to spend two hours daily, one hour in recitation work, and one hour in supervised study in preparation for class the following day. No student will be permitted to take more than two subjects.

The work is diagnostic and remedial, with the purpose being to locate the cause of failure or weakness in certain subjects, and to remedy such.

Funeral of Mrs. Flynn To Occur Here Tomorrow

An 84-year old resident of Bristol, Mrs. Margaret Flynn, wife of the late Michael Flynn, died suddenly at her home, 304 Jefferson avenue, yesterday morning. She was found dead of a heart attack, discovery being made by Miss Jennie Wolf, who resided at the Flynn home.

Funeral will be held tomorrow at nine a. m., from her late residence, with high mass at St. Mark's Church at 10 o'clock. Burial will be made in St. Mark's Cemetery, with the W. I. Murphy Estate, funeral directors, in charge.

LITERARY NOTE

Fog all-year-round reading, whether present or swinging in a shaded hammock or eventually hugging the fire, we commend that all-but-unknown masterpiece, H. O. No. 165.

H. O. No. 165 contains no dialogue, and is a marvel of economic style, for all its 788 pages. It has no plot, no hero. That's the beauty of it. You are the hero, and the plots leap to mind twice on every page. The United States government publishes it, the cost is 90 cents, and Robert Louis Stevenson or Joseph Conrad might have profited from it.

The book is a hydrographic survey of the Pacific Islands, with especial attention to uninhabited lands or atolls still in the possession of natives, usually "friendly and trustworthy" but sometimes savage and to be repulsed. Islands where the pandanus grows lush, where fresh water wells up from coral caverns, and the coconut, the wild banana, taro and mangoes wait to refresh the explorer. Every known islet and hundreds which are but suspected and described for what the observations of wandering traders are worth, are set forth in these pages, with everywhere the unspoken invitation to go grab yourself off a tropical kingdom, where Congress matters not and banks nor telephones nor automobiles disturb one's fishing or dreaming.

There are maps, lovely, lovely maps; there is even an extensive vocabulary (even General Johnson would feel at home on Ralik, where there is a word "to chisel"—"jila-parutu") and comforting proof that no one cares to count beyond twenty, for which the word is "nappu eja navade napnuli."

Atta Cove; Ba Bay; Boo River; Lulu Island and Tomba Tomba! Boy, pass the kava-kava.

OMINOUS VOICE

The Middle West "Grass Rooters" have returned to their homes with the knowledge that they accomplished much in directing the eyes of the country upon the full implications of Rooseveltism.

Not since the inception of the bureaucratic octopus now in control in Washington has any event been so effective in focusing the attention of the country upon it. Nothing now is heard from the White House about the defects of the constitution. Only a week before the Springfield meeting convened the occupant of the White House publicly deplored the fact that the constitution of the United States is different from that of any other nation, the implication being that this was something that should be remedied. The United States should be Europeanized.

The voice of the Middle West spoke at Springfield and if the words had a disquieting sound as they reached the White House, they were merely a prelude to what the King of the New Dealers will hear in November, 1936.

Administrations will come and go, but the Roosevelt debt will remain for many generations.

We do not know about congress as a whole, but Patman of Texas would seem to be adjourned for the summer.

Queer state, Kansas. The state legislative council has actually drafted a bill to abolish instead of to create some offices.

FASHION PARADE

By Margaret Garrahan
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK (INS)—More of the races... and this time out at Belmont Park... tweeds, suits and sweaters were the order of the day—and because it was slightly coolish those expensive silver foxes came in for much show.

Mrs. Cornelius Vandenberg had all the picture takers' lenses with an all-purple outfit—royal purple tweed coat, lighter velvet dress and hat topped by two cross feathers. . . Mrs. Howard Brokaw wore a sleek black tailored dress. . . Mrs. Allan Ryan, Jr., topped her costume with a big white straw cartwheel boasting a frontal nosegay, and Mrs. Dodge Sloane wore a navy blue and white print with navy coat and matching straw hat. . . Jock Whitney showed up in a plain dark blue business suit while "Sonny" chose a jacket of brown tweed and flannel trousers.

And there were any number of those white plume hats with exaggerated visors. The sweater idea, by the way, has caught like nobody's business—most of them being all soft and wooly and worn with chokers of pearls. . . If we didn't mention it before, the old V neckline is staging a comeback via Summer cottons—with the V going down . . . and down. V's in coat necklines promised for Fall, too, as a "relief" from the era of highs. Personally we still like the latter and probably'll keep on. . . And after our waiting for Summer all these months so we could wear them without subjecting ourselves to all sorts of frowns—anklets are basking in a big splurge . . . with Choice No. 1 being chenille or angora in plain pastels and the chatter leaning toward a downright anklet invasion of even the most respectable places.

the expression on our faces conveyed the full seriousness of the situation to Burke and Cassidy. True enough, it was a huge slate-colored shark within eight feet of them, lying rigid and ready to dart at his prey. He eyed them with a sinister, evil glint in his weasel-like eyes.
Burke frantically grabbed hold of the knotted rope, and with Cassidy's shoulders for a step-ladder was safely over the gunwales and on the deck in a trice. Still the shark lay, watching motionless, stayed by the hand of fate. Cassidy, being a heavy fellow, grabbed the rope and fought frantically to pull himself clear of the water. As he looked behind him he saw the menacing terror break into a slow motion and come toward him. Above him he heard our excited cries. I felt acutely guilty and was half over the side clutching his wrists. More arms reached down and snatched at his wrists in an effort to clear the water.

WHOSE WIFE? A CYRUS K. MANTEL MURDER MYSTERY

by CLADYS SHAW ERSKINE AND IVAN FIRTH

CHAPTER XXX

Mantel found that the servants had remained up much later than the guests, in order to trim the Christmas tree in the music-room, but they could not have heard anything that went on in any other part of the house.

Cyrus K. looked at the young man for a moment, and said: "Did your wife know Mr. Vane before?"

"No," she said, "she was surprised when I told her that Vane was coming here."

"Pleasantly so?" asked Mantel.

"Why, yes. . . I think so. Everybody was kidding so, that I couldn't speak to her, and just then Vane arrived with your niece Betty."

"No," she said, "she was surprised when I told her that Vane was coming here."

"That will be all, Mr. Mantel," he said formally. "I would suggest that you get the doctor to give you something, and then take a stiff drink, son—and keep a stiff upper lip. Death is never as final as it seems to the young."

The next one called was Wilbur Renton. He came into the room, and faced the small man with his usual air of assurance.

Cyrus K. tilted the parchment shade of the lamp on the desk before him, so that it shone full upon the face of the person sitting opposite him, and whom he was questioning.

"What did you do, Mr. Renton, after the party downstairs broke up?" he asked mildly.

"I spoke to Betty for just a moment, and then I came upstairs, went directly to my own room, and wrote a letter—an important letter—then I planned to go straight to bed."

Cyrus K. removed his glasses and stroked one eyebrow.

"I see," he said. "May I ask what you did with this letter? And also—if you will pardon me—it seems somewhat uncomfortable to sit in your own room writing in your dinner things."

"Well, Mr. Mantel," Renton strove to be light. "There was a reason for that. I had hoped you wouldn't ask it. You see, I had asked your niece Betty to meet me alone, later—and she had refused. I hoped that she would change her mind and send Suky to let me know, so naturally, I remained dressed."

"I take it that you and Suky are good friends?" Cyrus K. was casual.

"Oh! very. There is nothing I wouldn't do for the dear old soul, and I can safely say, nothing she wouldn't do for me."

"I see," said Cyrus K. "I see. That's very interesting indeed, Mr. Renton. Did you know Mrs. Millbanks before?"

"No, I had never met her," said Renton. "Although I had seen her often at Kate Doyle's."

"Were you in the habit of going there often?"

"Yes. Quite often."

"May I ask, Mr. Renton, when was the last time you were there, and whom you were with?"

"Sometime in the summer, Mr. Mantel, and . . . he flushed painfully as he met those black eyes. "I was with Isabel Mackenzie, who later became Mrs. Lawrence Vane."

Cyrus K. replaced his glasses.

"I see," he said. "I thank you, Mr. Renton. That will be all—just now."

Renton walked out into the library, trying to appear jaunty to his fellow guests.

The next name called was that of Betty Potter.

"Oh, Uncle Cyrus," she moaned. "Whatever are we going to do? Isn't it awful, I can't bear to think of Donetta, lying up there in the cold—dead—and just a few hours ago, she was warm and gay—and alive!" Tears flooded her eyes again.

"Come out of it, young woman," snapped Cyrus K. "Remember you are a newspaper woman, and you are my niece—and we've got to find out a few things. What happened after you left the main party?"

"Well, . . . first of all, Wilbur Renton asked me to meet him later, alone. He said he had something very important to talk over with me."

"Well—and did you accept—or refuse?"

"I accepted," she said simply.

"Ah!" said Cyrus K.

"I told him I'd meet him later, when the whole house was dark," Betty went on. "In the turret sitting-room at the end of the hall on the bedroom floor."

"And did you meet him?" Cyrus K. leaned forward.

"No," she hesitated. "I was all ready to go, when I was interrupted."

"What interrupted you?"

"Two whispered conversations in the hall just outside my room," she said. And then she told him of the two hushed talks she had listened to, and of Suky's making her phone for her uncle.

"So?" Cyrus K. pursed his lips.

"So? Roger Thornley and Lawrence Vane. . . Thornley and Vane," he repeated abstractedly. Then suddenly he turned upon his niece again.

"Well!" he snapped. "Did you finally meet this man Renton?"

"No," she said. "He slipped a note under my door to tell me that he would wait there all night if he had to, but that I must come. And then I saw Schuyler in the hall on his way to the kennels, and then I waited, and I told Suky to wake me, and I told her why it was important, but the old fool didn't do it. And then the next thing I knew, I heard Schuyler's voice calling my name—and I went out—and there he was with—Donetta. Her hysterical flow of words ceased, and she looked at her uncle with feverish eyes."

"You don't think for a moment that Lawrence had anything to do with it, do you?" she cried. "Why, he was asleep down in the library all the time—he never even knew anything had happened."

"Hush, Betty," his voice was stern. "That's no way to help him. You've got to keep your head. Of course, it looks bad for him. The fact that Donetta was a model of his, and that her husband did not know of it. That handkerchief with his initials. The fact that Vane is out on bail, and that both victims were found strangled off clothing on a terrace, just outside Vane's door. No, my dear, it is quite a problem. But we will work together, and we shall see what we can do. Now . . . I want you to tell me, if you know, who was Suky with before she came to you?"

"I don't know," Uncle Cyrus. She was on the road for quite a while as a wardrobe mistress, with some show or other. I know she had a little bit of her own at that time, and that it died. She never talks about it."

"Did she ever mention any particular person in that show?"

"Yes. That's a funny thing, Uncle Cyrus! Millie Mackie, who later married Roger Thornley, was with the troupe and she was awfully good to Suky's baby. She's the only one Suky ever mentions."

"Gee, that will do for now, Betty," he said. "Just keep your hair on, young woman, and don't talk to anyone else. Go on out and tell them I want to talk to Bobbie Nichols."

He did not fail to notice the startled look that flashed over Betty's face as he mentioned the name of the chubby little gossip.

Nichols entered jauntily—trailing his blanket like a toga.

"The first time in his life," he announced, "that Robbie Nichols Esquire has ever been asked to tell all."

"Sit down, will you, Mr. Nichols?" Cyrus K. did not smile. "This is a very serious and sad time for everyone in this house," he said, carefully studying the round countenance that faced him in the light of the desk lamp. "Will you be so kind as to tell me who you, in your great knowledge, would say was the best friend of Roger Thornley?"

"Wilbur Renton," Robbie answered without pause. "That is, if anyone could be said really to be Roger's friend," he added.

"I see," Cyrus K. removed his glasses. "And . . . did you know his wife Millie?" he asked.

"Yes, I knew her very well. I used to be around when Roger was on the spree, or squiring some other lady. No harm in it—Roger never minded—rather glad of it, I imagine."

"I see," repeated Cyrus K., stroking his eyebrow. "Tell me, Mr. Nichols—you are a man about town, a man of affairs—what has impressed you the most here at this party, outside the actual tragedy, I mean?"

Robbie was gleeful. This was his particular forte. This was where his individual talents shone.

"Two things, mainly," he said. "The fact that Betty said that Millie Thornley had sailed for the Orient, and I know that she hated the sea and the devil hates Holy Water—and the fear that Donetta showed when she heard of the imminent arrival of Lawrence Vane."

Cyrus K. leaned back in his chair and studied the face of Bobbie Nichols after his last statement.

"You get around a lot, don't you, Mr. Nichols?" he said. "And I imagine you hear just about everything there is to hear in that little town of ours called New York."

Bobbie pressed himself like a pouter pigeon under the gaze of an admiring throng.

"I guess Little Bobbie knows a lot more than most folks give him credit for," he boasted.

"Well, now's the time when talking will do more good than ever before," Mantel was general. "I wish you would tell me something about Mrs. Thornley and her husband."

Bobbie leaned forward eagerly.

"Well!" He took a deep breath. "You know it was awfully funny, Mr. Mantel, that Millie didn't tell me that she was going on that trip to the Coast with Roger. He wouldn't tell me, he's a taciturn beast, but she would—and she always talked to me a lot. Afterwards she must have been sorry, because she sent me cards, from all along the road. She seemed to be having an awfully good time—enjoying you bit of it, she said, she was."

She sent me cards all the way to the Coast, and then several from San Francisco, but she never told me she was going to the Orient. That's funny to me—Millie hated the water, got awfully sea-sick, used to have to stay in her cabin all the time. Why she couldn't even go sailing on the Sound, I can't imagine her taking that long sea voyage alone—but at that she might have been better off!"

He caught himself and looked at Mantel.

"Why might she have been better off?" Cyrus K. seemed to be quite uninterested as he put the mild question.

"Well!" Bobbie rushed on. "You see, Mr. Mantel, she was sort of afraid of Roger. She loved him, you know—and he loved her, in his way. But when he's drinking, he's not a very pleasant customer—and then Man is polygamist at best times—and Roger is certainly all Man."

He looked at Cyrus K. and his nervousness was apparent.

"Then Mr. Thornley is ugly when he has been drinking?" Mantel asked.

"Yes, very ugly. Why, I've seen him cause a fight more than once in a public place!" Bobbie's horror of this unseemly act was evident. "I remember one night at Kate Doyle's—why, Kate had to put him out."

"So?" Cyrus K. nodded. "Was he this way with others?"

"No, I don't think so. He was always charming to anyone who was not intimate with him—an awfully good fellow, and very popular."

"With men—or with women?"

"Mainly with women," Bobbie said. "Lots of men disliked him. I know Vane did, and he returned the feeling. But Renton was always his close friend."

"So?" Cyrus K. paused, then said: "Can you remember the last time you saw Thornley and Renton together?"

Bobbie laughed.

"I didn't exactly see them," he said. "I heard them!"

"What do you mean?"

"I was in one of those high-back chairs at the Athletic Club, and I heard Renton and Thornley talking."

"Will you tell me as much of that conversation as you can recall?"

Bobbie began.

"They were discussing the marriage of Isabel Mackenzie to Lawrence Vane," he said. "Renton was awfully upset."

MEATS are lower this week with the exception of smoked pork. Lamb offers most for your money but beef, veal and fresh pork are all lower, particularly forequarter cuts. Eggs and butter remain unchanged at their recent price levels. Seafood and fish continue to be a boon to the thrifty shopper.

There are several new crop arrivals, among the fruits sweet Bing cherries, sour red cherries, honeydew and honeyball melons, apricots and plums; in the vegetable field broccoli, cauliflower, kale, kohlrabi and rutabaga turnips. Freestone peaches are promised for next week. Watermelons are said to be better than in years. Here are three menus made up from seasonable foods adapted to different budget levels:

Low Cost Dinner

Beef Pot Roast New Potatoes
Carrots Onions
Bread and Butter
Watermelon Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

This decision left the legitimate publishers no alternative, if they are to protect the business against carpet-bagging raids, except to block payment of the bill as the only effective method of meeting a situation which might later be used as a precedent for similar disregard of the law.

The notice sent to Treasurer Landis of Bucks by registered letter on Saturday, reads:

Lansdale, Pa., June 22, 1935.
Leidy M. Landis,
County Treasurer,
Doylstown, Pa.
Dear Sir:

The Bucks County Times and the Bucks County News have both been authorized by the Secretary of Revenue to publish the Mercantile Appraiser's list for Bucks county. Neither of these papers, singly or as a continuation, one or the other, has been published consecutively for the six months previous to the said authorization. Neither of them, singly or as a continuation, is therefore qualified under the law to perform this service.

You are hereby notified and warned to make payment for such service at your peril and with full assurance that every effort that can legally be made will be used to see that you are surcharged with said payment.

Very truly yours,

Walter L. Sanborn,

Secretary.

In order that there could be no possible misunderstanding of the situation, a copy of the letter to Treasurer Landis was forwarded, also by registered mail, to Secretary of Revenue Barnes and to 'Appraiser Day' at Eddington.

Both are required by the statute to approve bills for such advertising before legal payment may be made by the county treasurer.

FRESHIE HAS 21 MEDALS

BOSTON — (INS) — Francis C. Alder of Roslindale, Freshman private in Boston University's R. O. T. C. unit, would give the appearance of a military war hero, if he wore all his medals at one time. His efficiency in various phases of military training has won 21 decorations.

CUBANS MAKE POOR SHOWING AS LEADERS

The Bristol Cubans gave a poor account of themselves as leaders in the Bristol Twilight League last night as they errored eleven times to help the Tullytown A. A. to a one-sided, 10-3 victory.

By virtue of their victory the Tullytowners are now but a full game in the rear of the colored boys in the first half chase. The Cubans have won eight and lost two while the Sweeneys are credited with six wins and the same number of losses.

The ten mis-plays behind "Eddie" Thompson ruined a good ball game as it made all of Tullytown's runs earned. The Cubans' three tallies were earned. "Jack-rabbit" Nunn and "Tommy" Gibson were chalked up with three mis-cues each while Dorsey and Thompson had two. The other error went to Bragg.

Not all of the winning aggregation's players reached base on errors as ten of them swatted clean hits to the outfield and most of these came after the runners had taken advantage of mis-plays to reach base. All of the hit were singles and most of them were Texas-leaguers.

The winning chucker was "Eddie" Green who allowed the league-leader, but five blows. Two of these mixed with a pass in the first gave the Cubans a run while another pass and two hits scored two more runs in the sixth. The losing hurler was "Eddie" Thompson.

Recover Nineteen Bodies

Medford, Columbia, June 25—Nineteen bodies have been recovered from the burned wreckage of two airplanes that collided over the local airport in South America's worst aviation catastrophe, police said today. Henry Swartz, Philadelphia Bogota representative of Universal pictures, and Lester W. Straus, New York mining man, were among the dead, while all South America mourned the loss of Carlos Cordel, singing and dancing Argentine film star. A 11-year-old Samper, famous air man who was educated in the United States, George Flynn, New York, newly-arrived traffic manager of the Saco Airplane Corporation, was badly burned and four others were hurt.

A transport of the German-owned Spadta Airlines, roaring in from Bogota was due to land for refueling as a tri-motored Saco liner was taking off, according to eye witnesses. When both were only a few feet off the ground, a sudden gust of wind buried them together, locking their wing tips and they crashed in violent flames, late yesterday.

Everybody on the Spadta plane was killed and five managed to escape from the Saco liner.

Bombing in Strike Disorder

Cleveland, O., June 25—The first violence in the bakery drivers' union dispute with Cleveland bakeries occurred today when a bomb exploded near a baking company plant where 25 persons were working, shattering windows in the bakery and neighboring buildings and demolishing a fence 20 feet from the property. No one was injured, police said.

NO-NAMES GO DEEPER INTO HOLE IN LEAGUE

The Harriman NoNames went deeper into the hole in the Bristol Junior League yesterday afternoon when they were defeated by the Catholic Boys Club, 14 to 3. The fray was a one-sided affair from the third inning on, the Catholic Boys never failing to lose the lead. "Ace" Dennen pitched for the Boys' Club and allowed the Harriman players only three scattered hits. However one of these hits was a terrific homer hit by Johnny Kysnak into right field. There was a man on base when this clout came but the two runs only brought the score up to 8-3. Billy Gallagher was the leading batter of the day, getting three hits out of his four trips to the plate. Gallagher also accounted for three of his team's runs.

HULMEVILLE WINS HONORS NEWPORT LOSES CHANCE IN LOWER BUCKS LEAGUE TO GAIN IN LEAGUE RACE

Hulmeville A. A. captured the first half championship of the Lower Bucks County League last night as "Stan" Carlen blanked the Newportville club, 6-0, holding them to one hit. He fanned ten batters.

The Newport Road Men's Club passed up an opportunity to gain valuable ground in the first half pennant race of the Twilight League last night when they dropped a 5-3 decision to the Edely A. C. on the Edely diamond. The defeat practically eliminated the Newporters from the race and leaves it a two-team fight between Tullytown and Cubans.

The Road Club made a gallant effort to swing the tide of the battle in the final session when they pushed over two runs and had the tying markers on third and second when the third out was made. It was in this frame that "Irish" Walterick weakened and Edely had another hurler ready to walk to the mound.

Kunz opened the last frame with a bounder to short which was handled neatly by Johnny Dick for a put-out. Muth banged a hit to right. Hovatter batted for VanDine and hit a hard one at Gould. Gould fielded it soundly and tossed a quick throw to Dick for a force-out. Walterick went wild and passed Wyker after getting two strikes on the batter. Swope upset the works with a clean hit to left, scoring Hovatter. Wyker counted and Swope reached third when Bartle hit to right. Crossley ended the match with a roller to Walterick.

Until the last frame, Walterick had held the Newporters to two bingles, a single by Wyker in the third and a triple by Kunz in the fifth. Kunz rounded the sacks on his hit but an error by Gould aided him.

Political Web Tangles

New Orleans, La., June 25—The tangled web of Louisiana's politics assumed a more difficult aspect today as 250 garbage collectors went on strike despite the threats that other men on the F. E. R. A. relief would be called in to collect the city's refuse. The demand for full pay, originally asked last week, was an even stronger factor with the men today in view of their belief that if Mayor S. M. Walmesley would resign, they would be paid from city funds made available by Senator Huey P. Long.

LOCAL BRIEFS

Visiting Mr. and Mrs. Douglass Johnson, Trenton avenue, during last week, were: Mrs. Michael Coyne and daughter, Joan, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kooms and children Fred, Jr., and Shirley, Mrs. Catherine Mulhearn and Jesse Burke, of Wilkes-Barre.

Visiting Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mereshon, 200 Otter street, the latter part of the week, were Mr. and Mrs. George Mereshon, Morrisville.

UNDEFEATED PONDON A. C. WINS SIXTH STRAIGHT

The undefeated Pondon A. C. won their sixth straight game from St. Charles A. C. Cornwells, J. Fusaro, of St. Charles' team, pitched a good game, but didn't receive support from his team-mates. The hard hitting of Al Piazza, Johnny Stallone, Al Eastlack and Joe Stallone clinched the game for Pondon. Al Piazza pitched well for Pondon, giving the Cornwells lads but seven scattered hits which netted them two runs.
